my mom was the best person I ever knew. you could tell her anything and she understood. she could do anything, cook, sew, paint. she was the most dedicated person in our church and still was doing something, even into her moderate states of dementia. she loved her daughters, her grandchildren a bit more, and her great grandchildren-even when she could not remember who they were. the life she and my dad had was the reason I did most of the things in life I did. from going to nursing school (which I really did not want to), to starting my family and having the a loving husband and wonderful daughter that taught us all about love, patience, God, and the value of life. I miss you everyday mom, debbie
