I'm writing this almost 10 years later. I'm missing my husband a lot right now, especially as I am mourning the death of my grandfather this week. I know my husband would have been the light that we all need right now. He always knew how to make someone laugh and smile during a bad moment, all while being sensitive to your feelings. Callie misses her daddy that she only knew for 6 weeks so very much. She always asks me for stories and it doesn't matter if they're funny or not.. she just wants to know what her dad was like. And he just adored her. That girl was his everything and he was the best newborn baby father you could possibly ask for. He loved my family so much and developed close relationships with all of them, including the members of my extended family. It's not easy to get an entire HUGE family to love you, but Travis did that kind of thing with ease simply because he loved them and lived for those relationships. He'd do anything for you, really. I just feel so blessed to have known him, married him, had a beautiful daughter with him. I couldn't have asked for a bigger blessing. Losing Travis was a major, major loss... but heaven, I know had a big celebration that day. :) Thank you to his friends for loving me and my daughter through all these years. Some of them, after a whole decade STILL check on Callie and I. I am extremely blessed for that. He still takes care of me :hearts:

My deepest sympathies go out to the Sinclair family for this tragic loss. I went to school with Travis and my best memories of him were around ages 13-15. The cute skateboarding Travis with the floppy long hair and adorable spirit. He could light up a room and make anyone laugh. I can not forget that infectious laugh the smile or the way he would be friendly with everyone. He had a love for his friends and family and did everything he could to make us all laugh. The silliness and sweet nature is what I will remember the most. The memories of Dad letting us drive the van in the neighborhood when we could barely see over the steering wheel, the laughter he all gave us when wearing that mask in the hospital, Allen Ranch nights, just hanging out together and him being there for me at one of the most difficult moments in my life. I will forever remember my dear friend and keep him in my heart. I pray his kids will grow up knowing their Dad was a great man and loving person. RIP dear Travis. We will all see you again.
