Keith Hendrickson posted:

Craig and I were 'twin cousins'. We were both born at Hillcrest hospital on the same day. My father and his mother were sisters. We grew up together and many years we lived only 4 blocks apart in Tulsa and had many adventures, good and bad, growing up. We spent quite a bit of time together growing up. Just a few weeks ago, I sent Craig a YouTube video of a fireworks accident captured on digital media. Around our 8-10 year birthday, we had an almost identical episode where the families were at Craig's house and his dad was trying to make Craig hold on to a lit roman candle. Craig wanted nothing to do with it and as he spun around and around the candle shot off into the garage where a huge box of fireworks were sitting. I can still see my Dad and all the parents bailing out of their lawn chairs in the driveway as fireworks began shooting everywhere. As we grew older, we both had motorcycles that we rode together on the unfinished I-244 that ran just a few blocks from my house - until I was involved in a car/motorcycle accident in 9th grade -- that put me in the hospital and no more motorcycle for me. We both ended up at Will Rogers HS even though Craig had moved a few times after his mother passed away. Craig and I both chose to head to the military after our graduation in '72. Craig went to the Marines on a delayed enlistment and I wanted to join the Army. My dad, a combat wounded WWII veteran convinced me I should at least give college a semester and then if it wasn't for me, he would support my joining the Army. My one year turned into 4 years with a degree and a commission in the USAF. Craig and I rarely saw each other after that as I was mostly never in Oklahoma or even in the U.S. Craig completed his hitch in the Marines and then built a life, a company and became Mayor of Broken Arrow. Both of my parents had passed many years before and, of course, work and life take over and we never saw each other until I managed to attend the WRHS 25 year class reunion in Tulsa. That may have been the last time we saw each other. Of course, I'm so very proud of what Craig accomplished in his life and also sad that our paths took us in different directions. I'll only ever have one 'twin cousin' and he will be dearly missed. Keith Hendrickson
